Four New IFLA Offices Established

The International Federation of Library Associations and Institutions (IFLA) announced today that not less than four new IFLA offices have been established: three in Africa and one in Russia.

After IFLA's Regional Office for Africa had been hosted by the University Library of Dakar, Senegal, for some twenty years, it was closed at the end of 2006. After a call for interest among African members and consultation of IFLA's Africa Section's Standing Committee, The Library of the University of South Africa (UNISA) at Pretoria was selected to succeed Dakar. Negotiations could be successfully finalised and today the final agreement was signed between UNISA and IFLA – a separate press release is available with more details.

In 2006 IFLA's Governing Board had decided to add Arabic and Chinese to the existing group of working languages (English, French, German, Russian, and Spanish). In conjunction with this development the Board approved a plan to start searches for host institutions for a number of Language Centres. The main role for these centres would have to be reaching out to languages communities that could not be reached with the existing language infrastructure (with a predominant position of English). Information dissemination by means of translations of IFLA documents, announcements and procedures (elections) would have to go hand in hand with membership recruitment.

The following language centres exist since today:

The IFLA Centre for Arabic Speaking Libraries and Information Institutions, based at the Bibliotheca Alexandrina, Alexandria, Egypt – a separate press release with more details is available.

The IFLA French Language Centre for Africa, based at the Bibliothèque Centrale Université Cheikh Anta Diop in Dakar, Senegal – a separate press release with more details is available.

The IFLA Russian Language Centre, based at the Russian State Library in Moscow, Russia – a separate press release with more details is available.

For further general information about IFLA Language Centres please contact IFLA Headquarters in The Hague at ifla@ifla.org

Was your session the most interesting one during the conference?

Was your session the most interesting one during the conference?

Were there any surprising outcomes of discussions held at your sessions? Please let us know about it!

This year we will have the support of 6 students of the School of Journalism who will help us with the gathering of newsworthy items for IFLA Express, but we also want to call upon the Officers, Information Coordinators and Newsletter editors of the Sections and Directors and staff of Core Activities and conveners of Discussion Groups.

Please let us have any descriptions/write-ups of (the results of) your sessions afterwards to inform those delegates who were not able to attend on the things they missed out on. Perhaps they will decide to come to your session next year instead!

Please try not to make it very long as we will want to have as much variation in the information as possible and we still have a limited number of pages per issue. This also means that we may not have space for your item during the conference, but please do send them in as we can always use any unused copy in the issue of IFLA Express that we send out electronically after the conference.
